

ABSTRACT

ANISA NUR FADHILLAH. 17824244

INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION STRATEGIES OF PARENTS TOWARD CHILDREN TO BUILD TRUST IN EDUCATIONAL DECISION-MAKING AMONG ADOLESCENTS

Keywords : Strategy, Interpersonal Communication, Parents, Adolescent, Decision Making

(xiv + 69 + Attachments)

During adolescence, education plays a crucial role. At the secondary education level such as high school, students are required to choose a major according to their interests and talents. This study aims to describe the experience of parents and children in dialogue to make decisions about education majors. The results of the study show that parents and children are actively involved in the decision-making process related to the choice of education majors. This research aims to describe the experiences of parents and children in dialogue to make decisions regarding education majors. The research results show that parents and children are actively involved in the decision-making process regarding the choice of education major. Having a close relationship and open dialogue helps both parties understand each other's desires and expectations, so that decisions taken achieve mutual understanding. The role of parents tends to provide consideration and direction, while peers also have the role of friends to share experiences and provide alternative choices of educational majors. Thus, this research highlights the importance of dialogue in parent-child relationships in the context of decision-making regarding educational majors, where active involvement from both parties helps reach better decisions.

Bibliography (2003-2023)