This research is entitled "Family communication strategies in the application of parenting patterns in an effort to suppress twirling rivalry in twins. The aim of this research is to find out, examine and analyze communication strategies and parenting patterns. This research method uses qualitative descriptive data collection techniques through interviews, observation and documentation. This research uses the constructivism paradigm which defines a paradigm which is almost the antithesis of the understanding which places observation and objectivity in discovering a reality or knowledge. The theory used in this research is Relational Maintenance theory. The results of the research show that the communication strategy in this research is that parents apply that each child must be given guidance and advice to both twins. In this research, the appropriate parenting style is a democratic parenting style where parents show and respect freedom that is not absolute, with guidance. which is full of understanding between children and parents and provides rational and objective explanations if the child's wishes and opinions do not match. In this research, the communication style of parents when communicating is that parents as guides and role models use an assertive communication style, namely a communication style that has an open character and expresses opinions directly so that the desired goals can be achieved according to expectations.
